Shary strives to capture special moments in time, the beauty and grace of all animals, and their special interaction with man, but horses and their elegance are her main focus. A life long love of animals, and horses in particular, has given Shary a special insight and feeling for them that is evident in her bronzes. They have been described as having a life of their own, as if they could breathe, and might move at any moment.

Her work is most noted for it's fine attention to realistic detail and the beautiful line and form that make an exceptional sculpture. Her bronzes have often been compared to the works of the finest nineteenth century animaliers. They are collected and prized by art patrons throughout the United States and around the world.

Shary's bronze sculptures have been accepted several years to the prestigious show of the American Academy of Equine Artists in Lexington, Kentucky.
